Courage to Speak® Drug Prevention Education Program for Middle Schools

The Courage to Speak® Drug Prevention Education Program for Middle Schools builds skills to help students make good decisions and resist the pressure to use drugs. Students take part in specific skills development and asset-building activities through:

- Internet research
- Group discussion
- Creative writing
- Scientific demonstration
- Art

The Program consists of 13-15 highly interactive classroom lessons taught by teachers, trained by the Courage To Speak® Foundation and begins with the book Sunny's Story, a glimpse at teen drug abuse and loss told through the eyes and mind of Sunny, the family beagle. The Program basis is the Courage to Speak® Presentation (live or DVD) by founder Ginger Katz, which introduces the real-life story of her son Ian's losing battle with addiction, launching open and honest discussions in a school setting regarding alcohol and other drugs.

The lessons enable students to:

- Have a clear plan to refuse alcohol and other drugs when offered
- Develop clear decision-making strategies
- Identify 3-5 adults who will support them when needed
- Communicate with their parents about risk behaviors and the dangers of drugs.

A critical component of the Program is the Courage to Speak® Empowering Youth to be Drug Free Family Night and Media Event. Students, parents, teachers, school and government officials and key community leaders gather to celebrate the commitment of students in the Courage to Speak® Drug Prevention Program to be drug free and be anti-drug advocates with siblings and friends.

A Yale University evaluation reported statistically significant increases in youth's communication with their parents about substance use and an increase in the number of times students talked to their parent(s) about: drugs and family rules and expectations about drug use; things they could do to avoid drugs; drug use in movies; and people they know who have been in trouble because of drug use.

This study further demonstrates the effectiveness of the Courage to Speak® Foundation Drug Prevention Education Model that engages home, school and community to keep our children safe from drugs.
